Though The Napanee Express Piano owning Is Now Fully Under Way. Voting Has Just Started.

Good Chance for New Candidates in Sections Not Already Represented

Now is the Time To Start Hustling For Votes the Field is Cleanest For Canvas.

At each new announcement of the candidates' vote standing, we have not enrolled see a good chance to enter the Contest and win, being that their enrollment will be sent in at once.

Those not in the race do not know what fun they are missing you look into the plan of the Contest more closely and see if you it would be a great thing for you to join the ranks and become a seeker."

AN INVISIBLE CORNUCOPIA

Is certainly suspended over the territory covered by the Contest and in about one month from now, a $400.00 Newcombe Piano will be the home of the highest vote getter.

Will you be the one? You have an equal opportunity with every

There are some sections which are not represented by a local and other sections where the candidate entered have only a few votes credit. These sections are soft spots for hustling new candidates. bound to be canvased by some one and a local representative will get a greater chance than an outsider.

Up to this time no great amount of work has been done by any but things are beginning to warm up and if you want to be in the race, get to enroll immediately.

There is nothing more vital at this stage of The Napanee Express Piano Owning Contest than the importance of each candidate making their lives to secure every available subscription between now and June 1st.

Many people each day call at the Napanee Express office to place back subscriptions, or to give orders to have the paper started; they are entitled to votes if they ask for them.

Some candidates can get these votes very easily, for in the regular routine work it is amazing how frequently you just stumble onto them. want The Napanee Express. The candidates cannot expect these votes in their favour unless they hunt them out and request them to do so.

The promises you are getting will mature all right in due season if they are followed up properly.

Sometimes a candidate may find a person just a mite cold on the subject of a subscription. If this is so, it is to your advantage to make up to it. This is why some candidates are ahead of others.

Remember that a convert is ten times more enthusiastic than one who has always believed as you did and when these lukewarm people really get you, you will find your vote standing shooting skyward.

SUBSCRIPTION VOTES

An item of interest to the candidates is the counting of the votes. Remember that any candidate may withhold her subscription from the contest until such a time as she may see fit to poll them, but have The Napanee Express go at once to the party subscribing in the contest. If a subscription is involved, also that candidates may be relieved of res

SUBSCRIPTION VOTES

An item of interest to the candidates is the counting of the vote in mind that any candidate may withhold her subscription from the published until such a time as she may see fit to poll the vote, but I have The Napanee Express go at once to the party subscribing in a subscription is involved, also that candidates may be relieved of responsibility of holding back money in case of renewals, it is urged that each candidate in their subscriptions fast as received, and if requested the Contest will return the special ballot which may be voted at a later date.

The ladder reaching to victory in The Napanee Express Piano Contest is not ascended by a single rung. Persistent effort, careful and a little patience will keep up your vote and make your possible and safer. Almost all, if not all, the candidates are having interest in the collecting of subscriptions, and, it is gratifying to acknowledge readiness with which their friends have responded to the call for subscription.

In a competition of this kind each candidate must be "up a" —guarding every channel where a vote can be coaxed into the Organization should be perfected, and the appointment of one or two paid managers is a timely suggestion to the candidate who would legitimate method of increasing the number of votes.

In seeking subscriptions, you do not know or realize how influential one you are asking may be, and it frequently happens that one is but the forerunner of several others. No one can tell where the subscription will come from so unexpectedly do opportunities present themselves.

To those who are still thinking it over, we assure you that means to late to enter, nor will it be until the last day of the contest however, take this as a reason for delaying from entering at once should you possess extraordinary ability in inducing your friends to you may lose out by an hour's work. Vane was turning away when his eye fell on a lady who was riding slowly towards him. It would have been difficult for him not to have noticed her, for she was an extremely beautiful woman, and she was riding a superb horse which she sat with a perfect ease that the restless movements of the high-spirited animal did not in the least appear to disturb. By her side were riding two or three men; and as she pulled up close to the railing just above where Vane was standing, other men pressed up to the spot, snatching off their hats and evidently eager to attract her attention and exchange a word or two with her, while every one who rode or walked past her, whether they knew her or not, regarded her intently and with evident interest.

After all, and with a due regard to the claims of other nationalities, is there anything in the wide world more moving and heart stirring than a beautiful young English girl? And this was one of the loveliest of the type. She sat erect on her thoroughbred, with her face full in the sunlight that lit up the exquisite color of her thick hair of bronze and gold, which the gentle breeze had blown in soft rings over her forehead. Her eyes shone like sapphires in the clear ivory of her face, and her lips, as perfectly formed as those of a Grecian statue, were curved with a pensive smile. When she was alone the sapphire eyes were apt to grow cold, and a trifle hard—one hesitates to write "calculating"—and the lips, without their smile, narrowed and lost their exquisite curve—but in public both the well-trained eyes and lips were on duty, so to speak, and took upon them any and every expression which their owner willed.

As Vane looked at her his heart gave one bound, then seemed to fall into an almost unnatural calm, a calm which made him marvel at himself; for not so long since the sight of this face, the sound of this girl's voice had never failed to send the blood racing through his veins.

Quite unreflectingly he remained where he was, leaning on the rail watching her with moody eyes which expressed the dead calm and indifference which had fallen on him; and when, after a moment or two, she nodded her adieux to the group—the members of which had all the attitude and manners of courtiers—and, touching her horse, moved towards him, he still leaned over the rails and waited for her. She was almost abreast of him before she saw him, for she was bowing, with the pensive smile, to some friends on the other side of the ride, but it would have been well nigh impossible for any

"Heard what?" he said, almost bluntly.

She regarded him with a chastened air.

"Poor Lord Marlingford died just—just before our—our wedding day," she said brokenly.

Vane's eyelids did not even flicker, and he looked at her steadily.

"Poor beggar!" he said. "I'm sorry. 'I'm sorry for him.' And he was genuinely sorry, for he remembered what the loss of her had been to himself. 'I hadn't heard—'"

She drew a long breath. "No? When did you come back to England? We heard that you were lost. And I—I was—sorry. I felt—when did you come back?"

"Some time since," he replied. "And so Lord Marlingford died! Accept my most sincere condolences, Miss Orme."

The sapphire eyes rested on him with sweet reproach.

"Miss Orme! Ah, Vane, you cannot forgive! You did not understand. You do not understand, even now—"

Vane's lips began to curl.

"I beg your pardon," he said with polite interest, nothing more.

She sighed again as she curbed the impatience and restlessness of the Arab.

"I want to tell you—but this is no place. But I must congratulate you, Vane."

"On my succession to the title?" he said. "Thanks!"

Her eyes swept over his seedy serge suit, and, as if in response, he said: "I only heard it last night. I came back from—I was in London, hard up, and, well, I suppose looking for something to do, when I heard the news. Sir Charles Letchford happened to spot me—"

She tossed her beautiful head slightly.

"The Letchfords? Yes. They used to be friends of mine, but Blanche has cut me lately, since—she did not understand, as you do not understand, that I was the victim of circumstances. You know what my father is—what my life has been—"

Vane regarded her calmly. There was a note of appeal in her musical voice which would have reached his heart and elicited a quick response some months ago; but it did not move him now.

"I—I can't tell you all now," she said. "Will you not come to see me?"

Vane hesitated a moment. If the woman who hesitates is lost, how much more so is the man!

"Thanks, I shall be very pleased," he said.

Her lips parted with a smile, a smile that was almost one of humble gratitude.

"You will? Ah, that is good of you! And I want to hear all that has lunched at his club, luncheon and too well, and the next on his face strove, with worthy but futile energy, the coat of enamel and paint I came home because I had news for you. Vane Manner—here in London!"

He sank into a chair and her with a significance was somewhat drowned by the bottle and a half of which he had taken with his lunch. "He's back," he continued. Fanworthy saw him—trustworthy for spotting a man you know, Manner is now of Leshorough."

"I know," said Judith. "And but for you I should be to Vane Manner, shot wife."

"No, no, my dear Judith in Sir Chandos. 'It was doing.'"

"My own doing!" said Judith. "It was you, you, w in between us, who persuaded throw Vane over and acc Marlingford. You know it."

for she was bowing, with the pensive smile, to some friends on the other side of the ride, but it would have been well nigh impossible for any one to have passed his stalwart figure and handsome face, with their indefinable air of distinction, without noticing him, and presently her glance fell on him.

The sapphire eyes contracted and closed for a moment, the ivory of her face went a dead white, the smile fled from her lips and her hand involuntarily closed so tightly on the rein that the horse stopped and tossed his head impatiently.

She was so close to Vane that he could see the quiver of the lips, the flicker of the lids which had dropped over the brilliant eyes. He stood upright and, regarding her with the calmness which still vaguely surprised himself, raised his hat.

She bent her head and her lips moved, but at first with no sound, then she said in a low, still voice: "Vane!"

"How do you do, Lady Marlingford?" he said in just the ordinary tone of polite greeting.

Her white teeth closed on her lip for a moment, then she bent her head. The "Lady Marlingford" was like a blow to her from the man who had been wont to breathe "Judith" as if it were a psalm of life, a sonnet of love.

"I—I did not know you were—back," she said. "And why do you call me Lady Marlingford?" she added, her brows drawn as if with pain.

He ought to have been startled by the question, but it would have taken very little less than an earthquake to startle poor Vane at this period of his existence.

"How do I err?" he asked, not bitterly, but with a placidity which cut her more deeply than any bitterness would have done. "You were just on the point of marrying Lord Marlingford when I left England—if you remember."

She raised her head and looked at him. The group to which he had been absent listening was quite close and within hearing, and she made a slight gesture with her hand.

"Will you come a little farther up the ride?" she said in a very low voice.

Vane hesitated for an instant. He had loved this girl with a love which he had thought eternal, had well nigh lost his reason when she had betrayed and deserted him; but now he had not the least desire to talk with her. His love for Nina—how in its purity and truth it shamed his old passion for Judith Orme!—had wiped out all thought of and desire for any other woman, even for this exquisitely beautiful one. But he could scarcely refuse her request and, with a nod, he moved beside her to a vacant space. She took her horse close to the rail and bent down, so that she could whisper to him; he was still sensible of the grace of her movements, but only sensible of it as one is conscious of the grace of a particularly beautiful statue or a singularly charming picture.

"Don't you know? Have you not heard?" she said with the faintest tremor in her voice, the voice which used to thrill him.

"You will? Ah, that is good of you! And I want to hear all that has happened to you. You will tell me, won't you?"

Vane, thinking that he certainly would not, replied, as in duty bound: "Certainly."

"You—you are not looking well," she murmured, the sapphire eyes sweeping over his face and the seedy serge suit.

"I've been down on my luck," said Vane, in response to the glance, "and I heard of the change in my fortunes so recently that I haven't had time to pull myself together."

"And I am changed also; don't you notice it?" she said, sadly.

"Can't say I do," replied Vane. "You seem to me as—as charming as ever, Judith." He had intended to say, "Miss Orme;" but the familiar name escaped him.

Her eyes lit up for a moment, but she veiled them instantly.

"Do you think so? Oh, I am changed; very much so. An you will come? The old address."

"Thanks," he said. "Yes; certainly I will come."

"Thank you; it is good of you!" she murmured. "When? To-morrow?"

"Not to-morrow," he said, mechanically. "I am engaged. I am going to Lesborough. When I come back."

She drooped over her saddle and held out her long, thin hand, so perfectly gloved that the kid seemed an outer skin. Vane took it—how often had his lips kissed the white hand that glove covered!—pressed it with the proper amount of pressure.

"When you come back—directly you come back," she said, and turned her horse.

Judith Orme rode toward Queen Anne's Gate, with her beautiful eyes fixed on her horse's ears, and, though she bowed and smiled in response to the many greetings she received, she was scarcely conscious of them.

She pulled up at one of the small houses in St. Margaret's Place, which are as fashionable as they are small and inconvenient, and, having alighted with the aid of her discreet and well-mounted groom, entered the house and went up to the drawing-room.

The tea-table was set by the window overlooking the park, and Judith, after ringing the bell for the urn, sank into an easy-chair and let her beautiful face fall into the warm, white hands from which she had stripped her gloves, with a restless, feverish haste.

As the maid was placing the urn on the table a step, light but unsteady, was heard on the stairs, and presently there entered a seemingly middle-aged, if not quite young, man. He was small and slightly built, with features almost as delicately moulded as a woman's. His hair—it was a really admirable wig, a perfect work of art—sat, with a fine imitation of nature, on a face painted and enamelled so artfully that it might have belonged to a young man of five-and-twenty. The figure, slight and debonair, was clothed with a sartorial skill and cunning to which Saville Row alone could aspire; and it was only the eyes, a little bleared and prominent, which aroused the suspicion of the keen observer—a very keen observer—and let out the secret of Sir Chandos Orme's age.

Judith's hands fell from her eyes as her father entered the room, with his jaunty, would-be juvenile air, and the expression of her lovely face grew hard and matter-of-fact.

"You're home early, father," she said, curtly.

"Yes; yes, I am," he said. He had

She bit her lip and stared fully, moodily, at the carpet flush of shame, humiliati and went in her face.

"You haven't seen him come back. He is much changed—he was quite cool, cold to angry—worse, indifferent."

Sir Chandos laughed so kind of chuckle which is b knowledge of the world and pacity for shame.

"I have every confidence my dear Judith," he said. confidence. I—I think I will in at the club on the chan rubber. Every confidence!"

CHAPTER XIII.

the spirit of the new earl.

The next morning Vane called in a hansom for his cousin, and Julian himself came down to the door as if he had been waiting. The deaf and dumb woman stood at the door and looked at Vane fixedly. Julian wore a dark tweed suit and looked extremely well, almost too graceful, in it.

"Ready?" asked Vane without alighting. "Come on, then."

They got into a smoking-carriage
of the express and chatted in a friendly way or read their papers. A well-appointed carriage was waiting for them at Lesborough Station, and a footman came forward and, touching
his hat, addressed Julian.

"The carriage is outside, my lord.
Mr. Holland sent it on the chance of your coming by this train."

Julian colored slightly. "This is Lord Lesborough," he said, indicating Vane.

"Oh, all right; thanks," said Vane.
quickly. "Get in, Julian; thoughtful of Mr. Holland; though for my part I'd rather have walked; it's no great distance."

Julian leant back, but looked out of the window with veiled keenness and eagerness. The road from the station to the Court goes through some beautiful scenery, and the road
is trim and neat, as befits the road to so great a place. The people they passed in the road stopped at sight
of the carriage and touched their hats or curtsied, and women and children ran out to the gates in front of the cottages and stared with a mixture of awe and curiosity after the Court landau and the servants
with their powdered heads and expensive mourning liveries.

Presently the carriage turned in at the south lodge gates, and into the avenue of magnificent trees which wound in graceful curves to the front entrance.

As the Court came in sight an exclamation escaped Julian; and Vane,
who had been gazing vacantly at
nothing, awoke and looked up.

"Fine place, isn't it?" he said in a matter-of-fact way as he let his gaze wander along the wide-stretching front of time-stained stone half covered by ivy.

"It is magnificent," said Julian.
"I had no idea—"

"I ought to inflict the history of France, the stately butler—"Mr."

France, as he was called in the servants' hall—came forward with a bow that would have done credit to a bishop.

"Luncheon is ready, my lord, and
shall be served—"

"Ah, how d'y do, France, said Vane, holding out his hand. "I'm glad to see you here."

"And I'm glad to be here to receive your lordship," responded France with a mixture of defence
and dignity which was almost awe-inspiring.

"And is that Mrs. Field?" said
Vane, as the house-keeper moved from the line. "Glad to see you, too, Mrs. Field." ("His lordship's a true Mannering," Mrs. Field remarked to an appreciative audience
in the servants' hall after "the reception.") "He shook hands with me and Mr. France; not merely bowed, you noticed, but shook hands.
And any one could see that he was
a nobleman by the way he did it;
not haughty and cold-like, but as if we were really friends. His lordship, being a lord, knows what's due to his servants.") "Lunch ready?
Right. We'll just wash our hands."

"Your lordship's man?" asked France, looking towards the carriage.

"Eh, oh a man. No, haven't got
one. Forgot all about it."

"Just so, my lord; your lordship's busy, much engaged. I thought perhaps you wouldn't bring one; so I made so bold as to ask Fenton, his late lordship's valet, to stay till—"

Fenton came forward.

"Thanks, France; very thoughtful," said Vane.

He thrust his arm through that of Julian, who had been looking round
the fine old hall in silence, and led him up the stairs. Fenton followed and opened the door of the late earl's room.

"Here? Oh, all right," said Vane.
"Where are you going to put Mr.
Julian? The best room is ready, I hope? Here, I'll come and see."

The best guest room was ready; it was not far from Vane's, and Vane
gave Julian a friendly little push
into it.

"Don't be long; you must be famishing; I am, Fenton, you look famished."

"Oh, I can understand," said Julian under his breath. "If this were mine I should not like to have Tom, Dick and Harry, to say nothing of their belongings, tramping about it. The place is a poem! You'll throw it open again, I suppose?"

"I suppose so," assented Vane, indifferently. "Why not? It's too big for one man—or a dozen for that matter; and there are all sorts of collections in it. One of the Lesboroughs, our great grandfather, I fancy, was a collector. I believe the pictures are particularly fine, they run all over the hall and the galleries and the rooms generally; and there's a famous library, and a collection of armor and gems, and that kind of thing. Oh, yes, I suppose it ought to be open to the public as it used to be. Why not?"

"What magnificent trees!" remarked Julian; "and this is the terrace—I picture it crowded with ladies and gallants in silks and satins—" "Like a fancy dress ball," said Vane, listlessly. "Yes, a shooting-suit and a briar pipe, to say nothing of swallow-tails, and tailor-made gowns don't seem very appropriate, do they? Good lord, we're evidently going to have a reception," he broke off with dismay, as he caught a glimpse of a row of servants standing in the hall.

A short, wiry little man came hurrying down the steps, his bowler hat in his hand, his face red with excitement.

"That's Holland," said Vane. "Seems a bit fussy."

Mr. Holland put the footman aside and opened the carriage door.

"Good morning, my lord! Welcome—er—welcome to the Court, welcome home! I got Mr. Tressider's telegram yesterday, and—er—have done the best I could on such short notice—"

Vane shook the steward's hand and introduced Julian.

"Mr. Shore, my cousin, Mr. Holland," he said. "He's been good enough to come down with me."

The steward was rather taken aback—he had expected the earl would be alone—but he shook hands with Julian and extended the welcome to him.

"Glad to see you, Mr. Shore; of course I know who you are, though I have not had the pleasure—"

He escorted the two up the broad stone steps flanked by the heraldic monsters which figured on the Manner arms, and cast a swift and critical glance at the row of servants who drew themselves up and, as Vane and Julian passed between murmured:

"Welcome home, my lord; welcome home."

Vane, who detested fuss, nodded and grunted an inarticulate response, but Julian, his eyes brilliant with the appreciation of the scenic effect, smiled on either side of him in a fashion that went straight home to the hearts of the female servants, who, in their neat dresses of black merino with white collars and cuffs, looked like the servants in one of modern musical farces whereof

gave Julian a friendly little push into it.

"Don't be long; you must be famishing; I am, Fenton, you look after Mr. Julian. I can manage for myself."

Fenton, with the expressionless face of the perfectly trained servant, went with Julian, who protested faintly, and Vane walked across the room in which so many Lesboroughs had slept—and died, and stared out of the window. He looked towards the south and upon a view which was perfect of its kind. The admirably kept gardens lay at the foot of the terrace with its marble vases and statuary, beyond were lawns with magnificent specimen trees, and still beyond was the home park. Over this he could get a glimpse of the uplands dotted with the farms and homesteads, a faint line of blue on the horizon stood for the sea.

It was a lovely view; but, alas, alas! Vane saw it not. His eyes were looking at the exquisite form and coloring of a Fairy Isle, beside which the view from the Court paled to insignificance.

If only Nina had—had married him of her own free will, if she had loved him instead of detesting, fearing him so much that she had preferred to risk her life rather than live alone with him—ah, well, with what different eyes he would have looked at these possessions of his, how happy he would have been sharing them with her!

HOW BLOOD IS MADE.

The liquids and the digested foods in the alimentary canal pass through the wall of the canal into the blood. This process is called absorption and takes place chiefly from the small intestine. After absorption the blood carries the food through the body, and each cell takes from the blood the food it needs. A pure glyceric extract made from bloodroot, mandrake, stone, queen's root and golden seal and sold by druggists for the past forty years under the name of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, gives uniformly excellent results as a tonic to help in the assimilation of the food and in the absorption by the blood of the food it requires. Eradicate the poisons from the blood with this alternative extract which does not shrink the white blood corpuscles, because containing no alcohol or other injurious ingredients. Thus the body can be built up—strong to resist disease. This is a tonic taken from Nature's garden that builds up those weakened by disease.

Dr. Pierce, founder of the Invalids' Hotel at Buffalo, N.Y., has received many letters similar to the following:

Mr. FRED R. MUNRO, of Paradise, N. S., writes: "I take great pleasure in writing you as regards my case and its cure. In September I was taken with Typhoid Fever, which put me in a dreadful condition. I was weak, run down, nervous and was reduced to a mere skeleton. I had tried most everything I could get but nothing did me any good until at last I was advised to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and 'Pleasant Pellets,' which I did. Before I had used one bottle I saw a great improvement and when I had used this treatment two months, using only a few vials of 'Pleasant Pellets,' I returned to perfect health. I cannot find words to express my thankfulness for this wonderful medicine. I advise all sufferers to write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, as he cures when others fail."

FARMER'S BEST PLAN.

It is said that the best assurance for peace is for a nation to be prepared for war. Be that as it may, the surest plan for the farmer is to save the moisture he already has in the soil. This may be done by plowing and harrowing. "Pray, but keep the powder dry," was the admonition of a warrior.

WHEN KILLING POULTRY.

Simple Device Found Practical and Convenient in Handling Fowls.

Here is a device which poultry men of Boston have found very convenient in holding fowls during the killing process.

Nothing could be simpler or more effective. It consists of a string and a thin disk of wood hung from a nail, as shown at a in the drawing herewith. When to be used the fowl's legs are brought together in a horizontal position, as shown at b, and the disk passed around them as indicated by the heavy dotted line.

The disk is then placed beside the legs, but beyond the vertical part of the string. Now the fowl is lowered and allowed to hang head downward, as indicated at c. If applied in this way there is no danger of the fowl working loose. To release the bird the position is reversed and the disk slipped to one side.—American Agriculturist.

CHERRY TREE DISEASE.

Unless Precautions Are Taken Gummosis Will Limit Life and Usefulness.

"Certain varieties of the cultivated sweet cherry found in the Pacific northwest are very subject to a diseased condition which is commonly known as 'cherry gummosis,'" says Fred L. Griffin, a graduate student of the Oregon Agricultural college, discussing some investigations which he carried on in the plant pathology department there.

"The disease is characterized by a more or less copious exudation of gum from the tree," Mr. Griffin continues, "the gum coming from the branches, spurs and buds as well as from the trunk, and a pustulated appearance of the bark is noted near the diseased areas. Often but little gum is exuded, but in such cases an examination of the affected trees generally discloses discolored tissues which are infiltrated with gum. Such areas are spongy to the touch and are usually discernible by the variation in color of the bark as compared with that of the normal tree.

"Cherry gummosis appears in both a localized and generalized form. In the former the disease is apparently confined to a rather limited area on the trunk or branches, such area being most often associated with a blighted spur or bud. In the generalized form large areas of the trunk or branch may become involved, and it often results in complete girdling. This latter type of gummosis often appears to originate in the crotch of the tree."

Mr. Griffin has suggested that the use of top worked, resistant stocks will prevent body girdling. Mazzard seedlings top grafted to Lambert cherries have proved quite successful in this connection, as have the same seedlings top budded to Royal Annes. The

Baldness is too General considered a Sign of Advanced Age.

A bald-headed person does not have an equal chance with one with a healthy head of hair, because it is too generally accepted as a sign of age. Many large concerns have established an age limit and refuse to take men over 35 years as new employees.

Probably 65% of bald-headed men may regain a good head of hair if they will follow our advice. We have that we positively guarantee hair on any head, unless the hair is entirely dead, the scalp is closed, and the scalp is glazed and shiny. Peterboro Examiner—The man, Marconi, who invented or discovered and made wireless telegraphy practicable, is a supreme benefactor of humanity, and Canada, whose government was the first to adopt wireless telegraphy and give impulse to its universal adoption, can take a good deal of credit to herself.

Ottawa Citizen—The farmer of today needs to learn that the more sense he has, the more dollars he will possess, and that the art of agriculture, like that of finance, depends upon the adoption of those processes that yield largest returns of least labor. In other words, he needs to scientize his work.

Lethbridge Herald—There may be a deep-seated reason in the old land for opposing home rule, but from the distance the bill introduced by Premier Asquith looks like a simple removal from the Imperial arena of the less important questions which too frequently takes the time of the Mother Parliaments and keeps the House in session too long.

Hamilton Times—At the meeting of the Ontario Educational Association one member condemned the school system as a crime against the nation. Another said that it was breaking down in the rural district for want of teaching and because of the falling off in attendance. It is particularly impossible to trace and regulate them. One of the first things to be done is to place good men at the head of Ontario school system in order to stimulate it.

Saskatoon Phoenix—The remedy for the west lies in the larger markets for the produce of the farm, and in a reduction of the tariff. There is no other way to prevent the decay of agriculture in the east for the restricted home market simply means to lower price to the producer. To get a profitable price in a restricted market it becomes necessary to limit production and decrease competition among the sellers and this is just what is taking place in Ontario.

Toronto Globe—In the case of Dr. Beattie Nesbitt it is well to remember that if he is extradited on any charge that cannot be substantiated in a subsequent trial here he will virtually be a free man as long as he likes to remain in Canada. After being brought to this country to stand trial on one charge he cannot be tried on any other. It is a fairly open question whether, if his presence is undesirable here, it would not be better that the application for his extradition should fail, or not be made at all.

Toronto Globe—How are the Canadian farmers who were told the American food producers had the best end of the reciprocity agreement to reconcile that assertion with ex-President Roosevelt's recent remarks at Decatur, Illinois? Mr. Roosevelt said:—"My idea was to support the Administration on every point I could, but reciprocity was not one of them. I have looked into it carefully, and under no circumstances, as far as I have any power, will I ever sanction the reintroduction of such an agreement. I am perfectly willing—and I am sure I speak for the farmers when I say it—that the farmers should pay their fair share, but they are not to be required to pay everything for agreement like that. And in any future tariff arrangement I wish to see it made as a square deal in the interest of all." According to Mr. Roosevelt, President Taft sacrificed the American farmers in the reciprocity agreement.

prevent body girdling. Mazzard seedlings top grafted to Lambert cherries have proved quite successful in this connection, as have the same seedlings top budded to Royal Annes. The Prunus Mahaleb is a species distinct from the sweet variety and as a wild seedling is native to Europe. It is, like the Mazzard, a resistant stock, though the Mazzard has proved the better for the cultivated sweet cherries. By having the body of the tree of a stock immune, or nearly so, like the Mazzard, the worst that can happen is the loss of a branch or so, whereas if this precaution is not observed the main body of the tree is liable to be affected and the life and usefulness of the tree limited.

Evening Frocks.

Authorities are divided on one important item—the length of evening frocks. In spite of the fact that most of the new models this year are made with a ten or twelve inch pointed train, one of the greatest Paris houses shows a majority of its new evening gowns with the short skirt just instep length.

Since there is this division of opinion among the great originators of fashion it would seem that each young woman may choose for herself as to whether she will cling to the youthful round length skirt or will prefer the more formal trained effects worn by the older women. Some wonderful new black jet trimmings are used this season, and white and colored spangles, bugles and brilliants are strongly in evidence. A black velvet evening frock cut en surprise has the deep V yoke of cream white maline lace. This corsage is outlined with a narrow row of brilliants and trimmed with a cut jet motif which extends down into the skirt to the lower edge.

The Well Bred Voice.

One of the elementary laws of good manners prescribes that we shall practice self control, says Florence Howe Hall. Cultivated society goes a step further and demands of us personal refinement. Americans understand this very well so far as dress and out- ward appearance go. There is per- haps no other nation that pays so much attention to dress as we do. Our countrywomen are admired in Eu- rope for their well made clothes, as well as for their own good looks.

Entertaining Guests.

There are some strict rules indorsed by those who know what is "good form" and others who do not concern- ing the entertaining of a guest.

A hostess should not accept any in- vitation that does not include her guest, and she may with propriety dis- card of invitation are received not including a guest let the prospective hostess know that an invitation is expected. This can be done by telephone or note, simply stating that "I have a young lady (or a man) friend visiting me and should like a card of invitation for her (or him) to your dinner (or ball or what- ever) for such and such a date."

If there are callers who are not aware of the presence of a guest a hostess may say she has a friend visit- ing; then the caller asks to meet who- ever it may be. An excellent plan and one generally adopted by those who en- tertain a great deal and are conse- quently invited out often is to give an afternoon "high tea," when simple re- freshments are best form and every- body in the line of acquaintances in- vited to meet "Miss Dash."

In the case of a man guest the men of the family see that he has a chance of meeting other men. There may be an evening arranged as well as "bache- lor" affairs, where he can be delight- fully entertained.

It is good form to just inform a host- ess when invitations are received to a dinner, a card party or an affair when special arrangements are to be neces- sary that one will bring a visiting guest. This is all that is needed.

If one has a reception or affair of any sort the hostess should see that her guest of honor, the one that is visit- ing her, meets every one present if possi- ble. If a dance the guest should have the men brought to her to fill her dance card and the host sees that she is cared for in every way.

Also a hostess should defer to the wishes and plans of a guest. There may be friends the latter wishes to see that her entertainer is not acquainted with.

On Shaking Hands.

The woman who offers her hand upon accepting an introduction conveys thereby a sign of cordial welcome of the acquaintance, but in formally fas- tionable society none but the hostesses pursue this course. The inclination of the head, a smile and a murmur of the name constitute a full recognition of an introduction in the eyes of many who regard their bearing as the ex- pression of the best form. In a rather crowded drawing room this mode is to be commended, but at other times a woman, whose prerogative it is to take the initiative on this point, will not greatly err in almost invariably offer- ing her hand.

Law Points For the Farmer.

The district court of Weld county, Colo., has decided that reservoirs lo- cated on government or railroad land cannot be held by mere entry and used without filings or condemnation. Reservoir owners will be obliged to buy their present sites outright or con- demn them.

The time to read contracts for dear life is before you sign them. If folks took half the pains to keep out of trouble that they do to get out after they are in knee deep they would be a lot happier, richer and wiser. It is a good plan never to sign papers that are brought along by strangers.

The degree of care required of rail- road companies toward their passen- gers, according to a recent Arkansas decision, is the highest degree of care which a prudent and cautious man would exercise and which is reason- ably consistent with their mode of con- veyance and the practical operation of their roads, and they are not bound to exercise the utmost diligence, hu- man skill and foresight consistent with the mode of conveyance or liable for the slightest omission in this respect. —St. Louis, etc., R. well as for their own good looks. But when they open their lips to speak, alas, all is changed! The harsh nasal tones jar most unpleasantly on the ear. The truth is we do not pay proper attention to the way in which we speak. We do aim at distinctness of utterance, and this we usually achieve. Speech should above all be intelligible, and Americans endeavor always to be understood. This is an excellent thing so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. Why should we be more slovenly in speech than we are in dress?

The woman who has her hands man- fured, her hair and face massaged, but who utterly neglects the cultiva- tion of her voice, has not a proper ap- preciation of values, as the artists say. She should take lessons in singing or in voice culture, and she should have for a text in her boudoir the lines:

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle and low, an excellent thing in wo- man.

When we hear Englishmen or Frenchmen talk it is evident that they have a respect and admiration for their own language. They try to pro- nounce it so that it will sound well. They seem to understand instinctively that beauty of speech is as great a pleasure to the ear as a beautiful ob- ject is to the eye.

If the American woman is wise she does not adopt the British peculiarities of intonation and accent. Nor does she endeavor to make her vocabulary agree with that of the English. She under- stands that our common language has developed along different lines in the two countries. "Apothecary" and "law- yer" are old Shakespearian words quite as good if not better than the modern British "chemist" and "barrister."

The endeavor to make oneself heard above the din of traffic and conversa- tion is in part responsible for our natu- ral harshness of utterance. At an aft- ernoon tea, where the voices of the women soar higher and higher till they almost reach the screaming point in the vain effort to make themselves heard, the result is disastrous. The habit of calling up and down stairs is also very bad for the voice.

Fertilizer For Dahlias.

Any good commercial fertilizer rich in ammonia and phosphoric acid and liberally supplied with potash will suit dahlias, but the best results are ob- tained by using it in connection with manure. Prepare the ground as you would for corn. When the plants are flowering freely a handful of top dress- ing to each plant and four parts bone- meal to one part nitrate of soda will be very helpful.—Rural New Yorker.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken in- ternally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby de- stroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hun- dred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE OCEAN TRAGEDY.

The majestic Titanic, in splendor sublime,
The queen of the ocean, of the White Star line,
A floating palace of grandeur, she left the old land,
With Britons brave sailors, this vessel was manned,
They left Southampton harbor, rode proudly the swell,
On the tenth day of April, nineteen hundred and [twelve,

With the cream of society, her staterooms were filled,
All drowned in the ocean in the waters so chilled.

Her decks were crowded with men of renown,
Millionaires from America, with their wives home-ward bound;

Railroad presidents, bankers, and brokers of fame,
The philanthropist, with money, who gave in His [name,

Like the departure of Columbus, toward the setting sun,
They cheered captain Smith on her maiden voyage [begun;

Farewell, God speed, and a shake by the hand,
They took their last look at the dear mother land.

Midst feasting and drinking upon the Lord's day,
Some danced, othert gambled, their last hours away;
At last came a summons, from the crow's nest a call,
Captain Smith saw the writing of the hand on the [wall;

It was just retribution, for His hand it doth hold
The same vengeance He visited on Belshazzar of old,
Captain Smith, noble fellow, though careless was he,
Made a living atonement—a sacrifice of the sea.

They struck hard an iceberg off the Newfoundland shore
Cruel ice gored her side, wide her star-board it tore,
Midst weeping and wailing, and rending of heart,
With a last fond embrace wife and husband did part;
Brave Britons were they, defying perils of the sea,
As the orchestra sank they played "Nearer to Thee,"
In that grave-yard in the ocean the promiscuous dead,
Are equal at last as our Saviour hath said.

The next time the snow drifts into your yard instead of making a snow man try to make a snow pig. An oblong mass of snow forms the body, and the legs, nose and ears are made of sticks surrounded by snow. A bit of rope nicely curled will make a good tail. My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and is now a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and try these Tablets.—Mrs. JAMES RIDDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

You will be proud of the bread you'll make with PURITY FLOUR

AFTER seeing a batch of big, golden-cruised, snowy-white loaves, that you have baked from PURITY FLOUR, you will, indeed, be proud of your cooking-ability—and proud of your wisdom in deciding to pay the little extra it costs to procure such high-class flour. You will admit, too, that we are justified in the pride we take in milling this superb flour.

PURITY FLOUR

"More bread and better bread"

PURITY FLOUR is milled exclusively from the best Western hard wheat—the world's finest. More than that, PURITY FLOUR consists entirely of the high-grade portions of the wheat. The low-grade portions are separated and excluded during the PURITY process of milling. Such high-class flour, of course, expands more in the baking. It makes "more bread and better bread."

It makes lighter, flakier pastry, too, if you just take the precaution to add more shortening. On account of its unusual strength PURITY FLOUR, for best results, requires more shortening than ordinary flour.

Progressive dealers, everywhere, sell PURITY FLOUR and take pride in recommending it.

Add PURITY FLOUR to your grocery list right now. 106

the affair.

Nevertheless he rode on. When he came near the cabin he heard the child crying piteously. All was dark. He entered and after a search found a candle and some matches. Striking a light, he went to the baby and began to pat and sing to it as he had heard mothers and nurses do. The baby ceased to cry. Taking the candle to the bunk, he let the light fall on the baby. The little thing blinked its eyes, and Crane held the candle where it was not to be seen. Then the tiny face broke into a smile.

But the child was hungry, and its good humor did not last long. Crane, divining the cause, went to a cupboard made of a box, where he found milk, and since there was plenty of wood for a fire he soon had the food warmed and in the baby's bottle. Then, putting it between the pink lips, he had the satisfaction of seeing his charge pull lustily.

Ten o'clock came, but no human being. Eleven passed, and when an old loud ticking Connecticut clock wheezed 12 Crane came to the conclusion that the baby had been left to die. Lying down beside it, he determined to remain with it till morning, then take it to his own house.

He awoke to see the sun shining in at the open door. And he saw something else—a woman about twenty years old, standing, looking down on him and the baby, who was using his breast for a pillow and had one leg thrown over him. On the woman's face was an expression of terror, which as she looked faded into one of satisfaction, then broke into a smile. For a few moments while Crane was awakening he was too confused to speak. When he did so he said:

"For heaven sake, why did you leave this baby here all night alone?"

"Are you the owner of this land?"

"Yes."

"Well, we hadn't anything to eat, and I took one of your lambs. A herder saw me do it and took me in. I told him my baby was here alone, but he wouldn't believe me. Just before daylight he fell asleep, and I got away."

"Where's the child's father?"

"Dead."

"Were you his wife?"

"No."

Crane understood. Matrimony in that region was regarded rather as a luxury than an essential.

The rancher went home and sent back to the mother a good breakfast, with fresh milk for the child. He had not yet sufficiently recovered from his prejudices to bring them to the ranch house. Instead he built them a fine cabin near by.

Crane considered that he had saved the child's life or might have saved it and regarded the fatherless little thing as under his especial protection. The mother needed protection as well as the child. Crane took care to build her cabin just far enough from his house to prevent her troubling him. She was a comely young woman and, though uneducated, developed under better surroundings than those to which she had been accustomed a good deal of sense. Crane got into the habit of going to talk with her, then consult with her, and in time she became necessary to his comfort. His books meanwhile had

Edgar Crane from the time he could talk was considered peculiar. As a little boy he evinced a distaste for little girls, and as a youth his antipathy for the opposite sex increased rather than diminished. By the time he came of age he was a hardened woman hater. Such men usually are devoted to their own sex. Not so Crane. He had but little more use for men than women.

An aunt vainly endeavored to get what she called "this nonsense" out of him and, failing, told him that he would some day become a convert to her views and surrender under circumstances no more sensible than was his opposition. When she died her nephew was still of the same opinion. The old lady left him her fortune, $100,000, with the stipulation that if he married half the amount was to go to a foundlings' home. Thus did she arrange to show her spleen after her death.

Edgar Crane had $10,000 of his own, and, taking his fortune with him, he went west to become a rancher. He bought a large tract of land and built a house in the middle of it, thus keeping as far as possible from neighbors. His house was comfortable, and his domain was attractive, being made up of plains and rolling land, partly wooded. He stocked it with a few sheep, but spent more money for books to put in his library than for sheep to stock his ranch.

His lands were so extended that it was some time before he had visited every part of them. Indeed, he spent most of his time at home reading. When he did ride out it was for the purpose of seeing if there were trespassers on his grounds. Several years passed and he showed no signs of dissatisfaction with his mode of life. Then one day when riding up on an eminence he saw a little shanty built of a few logs, some boards and considerable brush on a spot that he knew was within his bounds.

With blood in his eye he put spurs to his horse and rode to the cabin. Reining up before the door, he called for the trespasser to come out. Receiving no reply, he dismounted and put his head within the door. He surveyed one room, all there was. A mud chimney with an open fireplace stood at one side. Instead of a bedstead a bunk was built in a corner. There were a chest of drawers, a table and several chairs, the bottoms of the latter being imperfect.

Crane went inside with a view to leaving a notice for the trespasser to quit. A charred stick he found on the clay hearth served his purpose, and a board which constituted a part of the wall stood in lieu of writing paper. He wrote simply:

He was turning to leave when from the bunk he saw a heap that excited his curiosity. Removing a light covering, he looked upon the face of a sleeping babe. The covering had evidently been laid to protect it from flies and other insects. There was something in this little lump of unconscious nonresistance that was diametrically different from Edgar Crane's combativeness.

The child slept on, unmindful of being at the mercy of the man on whose property it had illegally squatted.

As Crane looked down upon the innocent face his pugnacity began to ooze out. A fly lit on the soft round cheek, causing a slight twitching on the part of the sleeper. Crane brushed it away. Then, carefully replacing the covering, he tiptoed from the bunk lest he should awaken the baby. Leaving the cabin, he mounted his horse and rode away.

He had no sooner left the influence of the innocent little squatter than the habit of his life regained its mastery. He was pleased at remembering having left his notice to quit—not that he expected the child on awakening to pay any attention to it, but when the parents, who were away doubtless providing in some way the necessities of life, returned they would see it and understand that they must move on.

The rancher gave the squatters three days to get off his premises—not that so much time was needed, but he didn't wish to listen to excuses; then he went to the spot again. He found the same status as before. No one was at home but the baby, and this infantile squatter was asleep. He approached the bunk to find that, though the head was covered, a foot and five little toes were exposed. Crane was about to draw the clothing down over them when he paused for a look. From a look he proceeded to a touch. How waxy they were! He bent down to examine them more closely, and the first thing he knew he had touched his lips to them.

The baby pulled its little foot out of sight, and that ended its connection with Crane's visit. Turning, he looked for a reply to his message. Though he searched everywhere, he found none. With a charred stick he wrote:

Will give you three days more.

Instead of giving three days he gave six and doubtless would have given more had not a herder he employed ridden up to his house one evening and said to him:

"Mr. Crane, did you know y' got a foundlin' asylum on yer ranch?"

"What do you mean?"

"Some one has put up a mud and board shanty over by the creek and left a baby in it. I rode past there as I come in and, hearin' a child squallin', looked in, and there was no one there but the baby."

"I'll go and see about that," replied Crane with severity, though in his heart was a fear that the pink toed baby had been deserted by its parents.

Somehow the conditions under which his aunt had left him her fortune came up to mock him. She had predicted that he would eventually do something erratic in the way of marriage, and in case he did he must turn over the legacy to a foundlings' home. He had just been informed that he had a foundlings' home on his ranch. There was something uncanny about been accustomed a good deal of sense. Crane got into the habit of going to talk with her, then consult with her, and in time she became necessary to his comfort. His books meanwhile had lost a good deal of their freshness for him. He visited "his kid," as he called the little trespasser, daily, and he couldn't very well see the kid without seeing its mother.

Several years went by, and Crane began to think of bringing the trespassing family to his home—marrying the mother—so that he would have them handy. But his aunt's will stood in the way. He was too honorable to attempt to get round his aunt's provision or to compromise those who were in his power.

Then he went east for awhile to try a separation, but he had had few friends there, and they had scattered. He returned to his ranch and his squatter family.

It was hard for him to make up his mind to take a widow who had never been married and hard to give up half his estate, but as time wore on he couldn't see anything else for himself to do.

He was drifting toward the inevitable. At last he succumbed. His wife proved a treasure to him, and, living in a land where there was no social station to keep up, the family did not live under a cloud. The child, a boy, grew to be a fine young fellow, and children were born to Crane as well.

"My aunt," Crane said, "had a remarkable faculty for looking ahead."

Doubtless the old lady recognized the fact that a man of extremes must pass from one extreme to another. At any rate, she got ahead of the man whom she could not influence and made him pay well for his obstinacy.

ANIMALS THAT COUNT.

Magpies, Rooks and Apes Can't Get Past the Number Four.

There are human beings, such as inhabitants of the Murray islands, in the strait of Torres, that cannot count further than two. But, most surprising still, most animals possess calculating abilities, and several have a distinct appreciation of number. In certain mines of Hainault the horses are so used to traversing the same road thirty times that after their last round they go to the stable of their own accord and refuse to take another step. Montaigne says that the oxen employed in the royal gardens of Susa for turning the wheels to which the water pails were attached absolutely refused to make more than a hundred rounds, which constituted their daily task.

A close observer has definitely established the fact that magpies and rooks cannot count further than four. A rook never returns to its nest until it is quite satisfied that there is no danger near. When four hunters or less departed in succession from a nearby log cabin the rook would return to its nest after the last had gone out of sight. But whenever there were more the bird lost count and returned to its nest even while some were still in the hut.

Similarly apes do not count further than four, and the Boers of the Transvaal when they want to hunt these animals hide in numbers exceeding four. Four depart in succession in such a manner as to be noticed by the apes, who then come forth and are easily captured.

HOUSES IN ENGLAND.

The Englishman is always by his climate. And you may surprise on the face of the never prepares for anything except moderate temperature. It is cold. The Englishman has house on the supposition that never going to be either—perate. In hot weather he think of electric fans, and weather he shrugs his shoulders endures the cold. MY BROTHER'S SUBSTITUTE

A Secret Known to Two Men, but Not to Their Wives

By F. A. MITCHEL

Jim and I are twins. We don't look as much alike as we did when we were young, because Jim's hair has grown much grayer than mine and I've a scar on my left cheek. But up to thirty the members of our own family sometimes had trouble telling us
apart.

There was a breakdown in the family when Jim and I were eighteen years old. Father died without leaving anything, and Jim and I had to hustle. I found a situation in one concern and Jim in another. Later I was sent away to establish a branch of the business in another city, while Jim remained where he was. I hadn't seen him for two years when I heard that he was ill and in a hospital. The news was too much for my ability to remain
away from him longer, so I fixed things up in my business for an absence, took a train and on arrival went from the station direct to the hospital.

Jim had a private room, and I was shown to it by an attendant. I found him in bed, but instead of showing effects of an illness I couldn't see but that he looked as well as ever. He was mighty glad to see me, as I was to see him. I asked him to tell me about himself and how it was that he appeared so well and yet confined to his bed. He gave me one of those frightened looks intended to impose silence. Then, pulling me down toward him, he whispered in my ear:

"I want to get out of this. Your coming is a godsend. Get off your clothes in a hurry and tumble into bed.
I'm going to put them on and make my way out. Nobody will know the difference between you and me."

He looked so anxious and eager that I immediately began to hustle off my clothes, and as fast as I got out of them Jim got into them. As soon as I was in bed and Jim was dressed I said,
"Now tell me about it."

But Jim gave me another frightened
look, as much as to say that he couldn't think of doing so, and was about to go
when I clutched his coattail and said:

"For heaven's sake, don't leave me
this way! Tell me how long I'm to stay here anyway."

"I don't dare take the time. If my nurse should find us both here it would prevent my getting out in your place.
She's liable to come in any minute."

"Well, one thing you must do—attend
to my business for me—that is, if I'm
to be kept here any length of time."

"All right; I'll do it," he said. And
before I could get another word out of
him he was gone.

He hadn't have been in such a hurry, as it turned out, for his nurse didn't

for him, but had the position in which
this mistake would place her and me occurred to him? Probably not. He was in such a hurry that it was likely he hadn't thought of this. I was terrified at receiving caresses that were intended for him. It was as dishonorable to the girl as to Jim. What was I
to do?

The thing I did—the next thing—was
to eat the dinner she brought me, all the while the lovelight in her eyes beaming down upon me. After I had finished and she had removed the tray
she told me that she had reported me
to be so much better that she had more time to devote to other patients, but she would come in to see me between her attentions to them. During one of her absences I thought the matter
over and came to the following conclusion: I must go on playing Jim's part,
whatever it was, for I could not do
otherwise without giving him away,
and how serious this would be to him
I did not know. I had been placed in a position for which I was in no way responsible. My conscience was clear,
and I didn't see how it could be cloud-
ed. I would act the part of a responsive lover.

I managed to put off my departure
as a discharged patient for two weeks.
How I succeeded in doing it I don't

Jim's hand.

I was happy in knowing that I could claim our girl, but I was puzzled to know whether I should do so as Jim or myself. He and I talked the matter over and decided that after becoming formally engaged I should introduce Jim to my fiancée as my twin brother whom she had never met.
This plan worked admirably. After the introduction I twitted my betrothed, saying:

"I presume, sweetheart, that since
Jim and I are twins you would as lief marry one of us as the other."

"H'm!" she replied deprecatingly. "I would know you apart in the dark."

I dare say this is the only case wherein two brothers who had occasion to quarrel over the same girl blessed each other instead. But the secret is between Jim and me. Neither of our wives has an inkling of it. Should Jim tell his wife how nearly he came
being carried away by propinquity
during a period of physical weakness
there would be trouble at home. If I were to tell my wife of the trick by which one lover was substituted for another she would be furious.

"All right; I'll do it," he said. And
 before I could get another word out of
 him he was gone.

He needn't have been in such a hurry, as it turned out, for his nurse didn't come in for half an hour. At the end of that time the door opened, and a very pretty specimen of femininity entered. She was dressed in a nurse's uniform of spotless white. This was very becoming to her complexion, which had a lot of red in it. Then, too, her eyes and hair were dark, and the contrast with her dress and cap was charming.

She came up to my bed, looked down
 upon me sympathetically—lovingly, it seemed to me—placed her hand on my forehead—a warm, soft one—and said:

"I really must report that you are ready to be discharged. The house surgeon will find this out pretty soon, and I'll get myself into trouble."

Here was a pretty go. Jim had departed without giving me the slightest hint what part to play. The only thing
 I could do was to be noncommittal and learn as much of the situation as I could. It looked as though Jim had been making love to his nurse, had recovered and, in order to remain in the light of her presence, had lingered in the hospital longer than was necessary.
 But how to reconcile this with his desire to escape without her knowing he had gone I hadn't even an inkling. The safest thing I could think of to say
 was:

"Do you really think so?"

"I certainly do. Indeed, I see no reason for continuing this deception any longer, though it has been a delightful experience. You know that I love you and I have perfect confidence in the love you have both shown and have expressed for me. We can meet as often as my duties will permit until we can be married."

This was the principal part of it, and if it hadn't been for Jim's desire to substitute me for himself would have been all I cared to know. Though I was puzzled, my role was much easier to play than before. I concluded to angle for time.

I based my first definite remark on
 the probability that my inferences
 were correct—namely, that Jim had had an affair of the heart with his nurse and prolonged his stay beyond his recovery. Besides this, the situation was pleasing to me, and I didn't mind acting on the same idea.

"The period I have passed here in your care," I said, "has been the happiest in my life. I simply can't bear to end it."

"It must end some time."

"Give me another day. Tomorrow I will try to make up my mind to leave
 you."

A pained expression at the prospective parting passed over her face. She bent down and, placing her pink lips
 on mine, gave me a delicious kiss. It seemed that all the joys in the world
 were concentrated in those few moments. Then, saying that she would go and bring my noon meal, she left me.

Never in my life have I been placed in such a quandary. My own dear
 twin brother had left me to personate himself with a woman he loved and who loved him. I didn't know whether I was acting both dishonorably and unbrotherly to him or not. He had not confided the truth to me. He had expected that the girl would mistake me

ed. I would act the part of a responsive lover.

I managed to put off my departure
 as a discharged patient for two weeks.
 How I succeeded in doing it I don't know, unless it was by the connivance
 of the girl who dreaded to part with me as much as I dreaded to part with
 her. At the end of these two weeks
 I am ashamed to confess that I was ready to fight to the death my own
 flesh and blood, my own twin brother,
 for the love of the girl in whose affections I had taken his place. I excused myself by encouraging a suspicion in my mind that he had treated
 her shamefully and that I was justified in securing her for myself. At any rate, I would never give her up to him or any one else.

But what next? When this query popped into my head I was seized with a sudden desire to get out of the hospital, find Jim and hear from him an explanation. Then, whatever it was,
 I would tell him that, having placed
 me in a position to make love to his girl, he should not complain that I had won her from him. Had I won her from him? Did she love him or me,
 or both of us?

Feeling that if I lay thinking upon this brain and heart racking problem
 I should go mad, I threw off the covers and jumped out of bed. I was in Jim's clothes in a twinkling and when my nurse entered again I was ready for my departure.

She stood looking at me, surprised.
 I folded her in my arms, showered
 kisses on her face—particularly her lips
 —then dashed away without a word of explanation as to my sudden departsure.

In an hour I was with Jim.

"Why did you put me in this position and why have I heard nothing
 from you since?" I asked impatiently.

"Does she love me still—I mean you?"

"She loves me—me, I say—not you
 at all."

"Thank God."

"What do you mean?"

"Substitute, Bob, and I'll tell you all about it. I dared not write you—I mean myself—for fear of giving away the whole situation. I went to the hospital engaged to be married. I hadn't had time to inform you of my engagement before I was taken ill. Immediately after our betrothal my fiancé
 sailed on a European trip. The hospital girl took a fancy to me at once
 and showered such attentions on me that I couldn't help reciprocating. I very weakly suffered myself to be drawn into an affair of the heart. I assure you I didn't realize how deeply involved I had become before I committed betrothal bigamy."

"In your appearance I saw a loophole. I took advantage of it, and from what you tell me all has turned out fortunately."

"Jim, you ought to be ashamed of yourself—to win a girl's affections and
 then run away from her."

"To have my own brother to dishon-orably take her away from me. It seems to me that's the pot calling the kettle black."

"Call it squared," I said, seizing

Don't Call It Slang.

A Cleveland man who has lived for a number of years recently got it into his head that he might die one of these days and that it would be well if he wrote his autobiography ere that sad event occurred, as one might say. So he sat down and wrote many pages
 and took those pages to a local publisher. After the manuscript had been in the latter's hands for some time the author called him up.

"This is BJones," he explained gen-
 ally.

"Who's BJones?" came the reply.

"BJones, you know—BJones of East
 Umph street, whose autobiography
 you are publishing. Ah—I'm a little short this week. Could you let me have something in advance?"

"Not on your life!"

And you may think the printer was slangy, but he wasn't.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Split Infinitives.

To sometimes in an emergency or when laboring under a great mental stress split an infinitive may be excus-
 able, but to deliberately or wantonly
 or with malice premeditation tear its parts
 asunder or to cruelly divorce the helpless and dependent "to" from her verbal spouse is severely condemned by purists. The general practice, however,
 is said to have prevailed among standard English authors since the seventeenth century.—Boston Globe.

A Fighting Chance.

"So you think the author of this play
 will live, do you?" remarked the tourist.

"Yes," replied the manager of the Frozen Dog Opera House. "He's got
 a five mile start, and I don't think the boys kin catch him!"—Life.

A Sandwich Novelty.

White bread sandwiches sprinkled
 with sugar are a delight in one household where everybody has a sweet tooth. It may be that the fashionable
 "nervous stomach" has been cultivated as much by the goodies in the way of cakes and bonbons served at daily teas
 as anything else. Sweet sandwiches are twice as healthy and to most persons are a welcome relief from the unversal American cake habit.

Southern Johnnycake.

For southern johnnycake make a batter of half a cupful of sugar, an egg,
 four tablespoonfuls of drippings or butter, a level teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a cupful of sour milk, a cupful of cornmeal and a cupful of flour.
 Put a large tablespoonful of lard into an iron frying pan, and when it is very hot turn in the batter and bake in a hot oven. Southern cooks scorn a tin baking dish for this cake.

Instinctive Mimicry.

Why if one man on the street takes out his watch do others do the same? Among the very early instincts recognized in the human mind are mimicry and curiosity. Mimicry develops into habit, as when we see many persons walking faster than we do we gradually fall into their gait and in time this faster gait becomes habitual with us. Every instinct emanates from one or the other of the fundamental instincts, self preservation and race preservation. Every action that benefits the human being can be traced back to the instinct of self preservation, and among these actions are the acquisition of knowledge, even the knowledge of the time of day.

Instinctive mimicry creates an impulse which in the case of the man looking at his watch upon seeing another do the same, is supported by another instinct, curiosity, and by the human faculty, reason. We therefore follow the impulse and look at our watch.—New York American.

For the past week the world has talked of nothing but the Titanic disaster which in size is unequalled in the history of man's e the high seas. On the night of April 14, the White Star Line's Titanic, the largest vessel in the world, was racing westward at a speed of 24 knots with 2,340 men, women and children aboard on her maiden voyage. She represented the last word in going luxury and speed. The Titanic was a ship of peace that science has contrived to make the comfort of travel a reality. Palatial staterooms, sitting rooms, smoking rooms, lounges, gymnasium, promenades, orchestra, a dining service and a wealth of appointments that have never before been dreamed of in the history of the world was the greatest ever known of a mile long—and Lord Kelvin, the great designer, had heralded it as an "unsinkable" boat by reason of its

A bill may be introduced at the next session of the Legislature to curtail the powers of the Medical Council.

The Titanic disaster will cost insurance companies of Hartford, Conn., nearly $1,000,000, chiefly on those companies which do an accident business.

The Welland Canal was opened for the season yesterday. No boats arrived to take advantage of the fact,

will cause the farm to make more money, because it will show up the unprofitable undertakings, and this showing will naturally cause the farmer to give his attention to those things which are revealed as profitable. On this matter of bookkeeping Andrew Boss of Minnesota says in the Kansas Farmer:

"Farming is now considered as a business. To be successful as a business man the farmer must adopt business principles. He should know the cost of production of the various farm products and which products can be grown and sold at the greatest net profit and with the least draft on the resources of his farm. He should know what he has invested in his business and the rate of interest his investment is paying; also whether he himself is earning anything or whether his income is earned altogether by his money. If the latter, he may as well invest his money in 6 per cent mortgages and take it easy himself.

"The only way to learn these facts is to take an inventory of the farm and equipment. Start a simple accounting system, carrying it through the year, and taking a balance at the close of the year. The accounting system need not be complex nor the labor exacting. Jan. 1 to April 1 is a good time to take an inventory, as the stock is at its lowest usually during that season. There are many simple forms of accounting suitable to the farmer's needs, any one of which forms may be used.

"The winter season offers many spare moments for studying these systems and putting one of them into use. Why not utilize the moments and do something that will be useful and at the same time add to the knowledge of the farm business? Often a grown son or daughter may be induced to become the account keeper, thus getting a good business training and improving the mind at the same time. And it is surprising how much use will be made of the facts recorded when once available."

Hear Nesbitt on Friday.

Toronto, April 23.—Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, re-arrested in Chicago on new charges of fraud, will receive a hearing next Friday. His counsel, W. K. Pattison, will be joined by H. H. came in sight and took up the survivors. But even there they were not safe. Six died from exposure and the condition of some of the others
was pitiful to see.

All day Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the world stood breathless,
watching by dispatch the journey of the Carpathia threading her way through the ice with her precious fragment of the ship's company of the Titanic on board, and when at last she docked at New York the scene was heartrending. Widows and orphans whose men had been left off
the Grand Bank straggled ashore to be cared for by strangers. Thirty of the widows were brides under 23
years old, and several babes had lost
everyone to care for them.

This is the story in brief of the loss of the Titanic, the greatest marine tragedy in history, and the whole of it will never be told. The world is horrified and an enquiry is in progress that will revolutionize transatlantic passenger carrying, but no
tribunal can bring back those men who smiled cheerily as they put the helpless ones into the boats and with a calm, clear eye looked death in the

call out from the bridge "Be British,"
and they were brave British gentlemen to the last.

HAVE IDENTIFIED 27.

Only One of the Bodies of Prominent Victims Found.

New York, April 25.—Twenty-seven bodies have been identified on the cable steamer Mackay-Bennett, according to information received here
through wireless messages to the White Star Line offices. The list of 27 names contain none of several of the prominent men who perished unless it be that "George W. Widen," as sent by wireless, refers, as it is believed probable, George D. Widener of Philadelphia.

The original passenger lists of the Titanic do not mention "Widen,"
which apparently establishes the identity of the body as that of Mr.
Widener, son of P. A. B. Widener, a director of the White Star Line. Mr.
Widener's son Harry was also among the victims.

The list, as reviewed at the White
Star Line offices, is as follows: D. M.

Annulled the Marriage.

Montreal, April 23.—Mr. Justice Laurendeau has just annulled the marriage of a young couple which took place here last fall.

The contracting parties were S. B.
Wright, a student of Cornell University, Troy, N.Y., and the 20-year-old daughter of Mrs. Lillian Tremblay, of Montreal. They met while the girl was on a visit to some friends at

ENGINEERS TO GO OUT

Strike Involving 34,000 Men
Ordered in States.

Chief Warren S. Stone Announces
That the Locomotive Engineers
East of Chicago and North of the Potomac Will Quit Work To-day—
Federal Officials Make Offer to Arbitrate and Men's Leaders Accept.

New York, April 23.—Warren S.
Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, announced at 5.30 p.m. that a strike of engineers on fifty railroads, east of Chicago and north of the Potomac River, would go into effect 24 hours hence.

"The engineers' committee has decided that its 52 men would start for their respective points to-night," Mr.
Stone said last night, "and that a strike will be called in 36 hours. This will allow 24 hours for the members
to get back to their respective points;
ten hours in which to put the strike
order into effect and two hours in which to notify the different railroads
of the intention to strike."

While a call for a strike has gone forth, there is still hope of a fairly speedy settlement, provided the railroads show a disposition to accept arbitration.

After the notice had been given by Chief Warren S. Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, he received an offer from Charles F. Neil,
labor commissioner, and Justice
Knapp of the United States Commerce Court, to arbitrate the differences, and Chief Stone recommended to the men's committee that the proposal be accepted.

The engineers' committee of fifty voted to accept the proposal of Messrs. Knapp and Neil for mediation. The formal announcement will be made to-day.

At the time Mr. Stone gave out the statement he had not received any official word from the railway managers' committee, which had been in session nearly all day considering the engineers' strike vote, but was adjourning at 5 o'clock last night without having decided to concede the engineers' demand for an increase in wages to about 18 per cent.

Commissioner of Labor Charles P.
Neil, and Justice Knapp of the U. S.
Commerce Court, were here last night with the hope of getting both sides in the controversy to agree to mediation or arbitration, but it is said that the engineers are determined to go ahead with the strike. Stone accused the railroad managers of bad faith. He said that during the 43 hours' armistice the companies were getting ready to fill the places of strikers.

what I would call arrogant in their

CURED OF THIS HORRIBLE DISEASE

Edmonton Girl saved By
"Fruit-a-tives"

EDMONTON, ALTA., Nov. 20th 1911.
"I had been a sufferer from babyhood
with that terrible complaint, Constipation.

I have been treated by physicians and have taken every medicine that I heard of, but without the slightest benefit. I concluded that there was no
cure for this horrible disease.

Finally, I read of "Fruit-a-tives" and decided to try them, and the effect was marvellous.

The first box gave me great relief,
and after I used a few boxes, I found
that I was entirely well.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine
that ever did me any good for Chronic Constipation and I want to say to all who suffer as I did—Try "Fruit-a-tives"—
why suffer any longer when there is a perfect cure in this great fruit medicine?"
(Miss) E. A. GOODALL.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only remedy in the world made of fruit and the only one that will completely and absolutely cure Constipation.

attitude," he said.

It is understood that Mr. Stone will make his headquarters in New York City and issue at once an appeal for an assessment to finance the strike.

It is declared by Mr. Stone that 24,000 men will be affected by the strike order. Of these 26,700 are members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and about 6,500 are in the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen, who, the engineers declare, will join the strike. The rest are non-union men who, Chief Stone
says, have joined in the strike vote
passed by the brotherhood.

The fifty railroads affected have a mileage of about 50,000 miles, doing 52 per cent. of the railway traffic of the United States.

The include practically all but three of the railroads in the territory
roughly described as east of Chicago and north of the Potomac River. The three exceptions are the Central Railroad of New Jersey, whose contract
with the engineers does not expire
until June 1, and the Central Vermont and Rutland Railroads, both of which are in Vermont, and which have a separate agreement with the men employed, so that the result will be their taking up the wage question directly with the men.

New District Named.

Toronto, April 23.—"Patricia" is the official name of the new territory of district—comprising in all about 148,000 square miles—that has been added to the Province of Ontario as the result of the Manitoba boundary settle- ment. The territory extends north from the Albany River to Hudson Bay.

Sir James Whitney made the an- nouncement yesterday afternoon.

"Before this new district is divided up," said Sir James, "it must be given a name, and the name has been decided on. I have here the written consent of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and his daughter to the name being given."

Princess Patricia herself stated that she is very glad that her name should be associated with the increased di- mensions and prosperity of the Province of Ontario.

Unrest at Canton.

Hong Kong, April 23.—Fears are entertained of further serious disorders in Canton. Thousands of sol- diers have returned from the north in a state of discontent.

The governor and general in com- mand have been impeached for the execution of a Chinese editor.

Replaces "Flying Post."

Ottawa, April 23.—The Postoffice De- partment announced yesterday that it had decided to meet the request of the Toronto Board of Trade, which sometime ago made representations that discontinuance of the train known as the "Flying Post" would seriously inconvenience merchants in the sending of mails.

The deputation pointed out that it did not ask for the continuance of the "Flying Post" for the delivery of the newspapers, but requested that, as the business men found it very con- venient, some arrangement be made to have mails collected up to 10 or 10.30 p.m. in Toronto, despatched the same night.

This is what the Department has arranged. Beginning on May 1, these mails will be placed on the 11.20 Grand Trunk train, and early in June the time of this train will be changed to leave Toronto at 11.40 p.m.

Dr. Harkness, of Cornwall, Rev. H. C. Priest and Rev. C. H. Historical Lecture To-Night.

Don't forget Dr. Needler's lecture in Historical Hall to-night. The subject, "Education in Germany and Ontario," will be most interesting. Those who heard Dr. Needler's lecture in February 1910 will remember that he gave many thoughts worthy of careful consideration at that time. This is the last regular lecture of the course for the season. The entrance, as usual, is free to all.

Flags

All the people of Napanee should consider seriously the purchase of a Canadian flag before the meeting of the Ontario Historical Society is held here in June. This old United Empire Loyalist County should be leading all others in its display of the flag, and every house in Napanee should have a Canadian flag to hang in a conspicuous place during the three days that the Ontario Historians are here. This is one way in which all will be able to help in the entertainment. If you cannot get a large flag get a small one but be sure and have a flag and display it.

Grand Concert.

Mr. Francis Fischer Powers purposes giving a concert of a very high order in the hall on May 9th. He will be assisted by both local and foreign talent and this concert will assuredly be the crowning event of the musical season in Napanee. Mr. Powers has held a large class in voice culture in our town for almost a year and a half with unprecedented success and anyone at all observant must have noticed the very marked progress and wonderful improvement in the vocal music as a result of Mr. Powers' wonderful teaching during this period. Mr. Powers is well-known as a highly artistic singer, as well as teacher, on both sides of the Atlantic having resided on the European continent and in England for a number of years, as well as New York City, where he has lived latterly and has trained many of the foremost singers at present before the American public. Mr. Powers' knowledge of vocal music, both ancient and modern classics, and the latest compositions of best modern composers for the voice is unequalled and in the building up of his pupil's repertoire and in the art of program making he is unexcelled. The influence of Mr. Powers' singing and teaching has been very marked in the Ladies Musical Club, where he and his pupils have appeared at different times both this season and last season bringing before the club the best songs and thereby elevating the public taste and also educating the club in artistic programme making. Every church in the town should heartily endorse Mr. Powers' work here as they are dependent on good singing for a large part of the service. One of the principal features of the coming concert is the Ladies Choral Club, which is entirely of local singers. The beautiful part songs which are being prepared should be of great interest and pleasure to every listener. Be sure to keep in mind the date of this concert. The music lovers of Napanee who have already a reputation of being a refined and attentive audience are very heartily and cordially invited to make this concert a great success by their presence on the above date.
